

Sample Curriculum

Before your camp week starts, be sure to communicate frequently with parents, telling them how to log on (Zoom ID and password), as well as how the schedule will work, what materials - if any - kids will need, what kind of space they need in their home, etc. Will you be using music tracks during the week that they will need to access from a Google Drive or YouTube playlist? Or a pdf of a script(s)? If so, share that with parents and ask that they show their kids how to access it from their device.

One helpful pre-camp step for us is to send out a questionnaire, asking parents about things such as experience (in dance, theatre, music), special areas of interest, challenges (learning challenges, for instance, or diagnosed attention issues), or mobility restrictions.

To get them excited about camp, you might announce specific “dress up days” for each day -- a theme around which they can build a costume and pick a Zoom background. We have suggested themes for each day :) I also like to choose my own Zoom background from a famous musical for each day and have the kids guess the musical -- and then we talk briefly about that show.
